The Beginning at Europe's Edge

This journey begins at Cape Hoka, the end of Europe. The moment we stand at the end of the continent, we are no longer tourists, but people who face boundaries directly.

The waves crashing down the cliffs and the strong wind slow down your movement, making you ask yourself why you're driving on this path. This stretch from Lisbon to Sagres is not just a start, but a time to imprint the feeling of 'a journey that begins at the end.'

At Cabo da Roca, where Europe meets the Atlantic, the journey begins. Waves, cliffs, and relentless wind slow the rhythm of travel, turning the ride from simple movement into a quiet encounter with the edge of a continent.

Ride Across Civilizations

The road from Seville to Carmona and then to Ronda is not a journey between cities, but an experience that transcends time.

The Iberian city, where traces of Islam, Christianity, and Rome are layered together, reveals the grain of different eras at the same time. Passing through alleys, city walls, and squares, we read not just scenery but the flow of civilization. This journey is not about shortening distances, but about riding deeply through time.

From Seville to Carmona and Ronda, the road moves through layered histories rather than distance. Roman, Islamic, and Christian traces unfold across plazas and stone walls, turning the ride into a journey through civilization itself.

Where Land Shapes Emotion

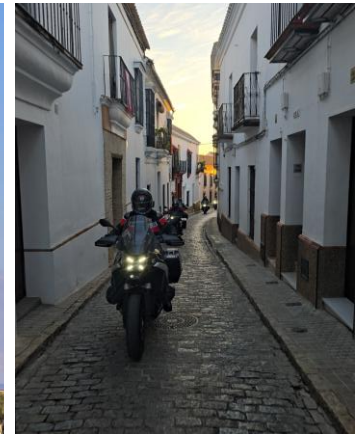

Passing through the plains of Andalusia and leading to Gibraltar and Ronda, In the section, the scenery is not just a backdrop, It becomes a flow of emotions.

The rhythm that begins on the endless plains meets cliffs and mountainous sections, transforming into tension, and the moment it meets the sea, it leads to an overwhelming sense of liberation. This change is not visible to the eyes but felt through the throttle and driving rhythm with the body.

The Iberian roads are not about terrain, This is a course on designing emotions.

Across Andalusia toward Gibraltar and Ronda, the landscape becomes emotion in motion. Open plains shift into cliffs and mountain roads, before releasing into the sea. This is not scenery to observe, but terrain felt through rhythm, throttle, and motion.

Local Immersion

Food Culture

Iberia's food culture is the result of the region's time and climate. Starting from Seville's tapas bars, continuing through Andalusian olive oil and seafood, and traditional dishes near Ronda, every meal becomes part of the journey. It's not just a simple meal, but a natural experience of how the locals live and their rhythm.
