3. Taiwan : An Island of High Mountains

From Sea to the High Mountains

Taiwan is one of the world's most renowned countries for its alpine terrain. Within the small island, there are over 260 mountains over 3,000 meters above sea level, with the highest peak, Mount Wi, reaching 3,952 meters. About 70% of the island's area is mountainous, making it a place with very distinct changes in terrain.

Taiwan is a land of dramatic elevation, where coastal roads rise into cloud-level mountain passes. Tropical forests, deep gorges, and alpine landscapes unfold within a single island, creating one of Asia's most dynamic riding experiences.

Local Immersion

Food Culture

Taiwanese tables are a unique food culture created by the natural blend of deep Chinese flavors and Japanese delicacy. Thanks to the warm and humid climate, the fruit is exceptionally sweet and fragrant; on the roads, you can taste crisp wax jambu, and in Taitung, you can taste stone fruits said to resemble Buddha's head. From fragrant tea culture to beef noodles and dim sum, Taiwanese food enriches your journey.

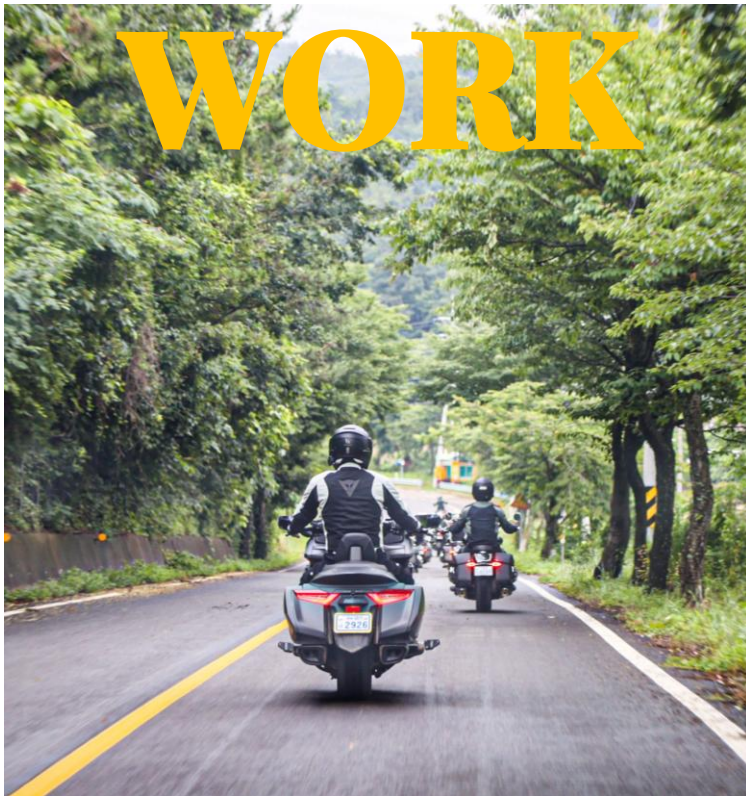

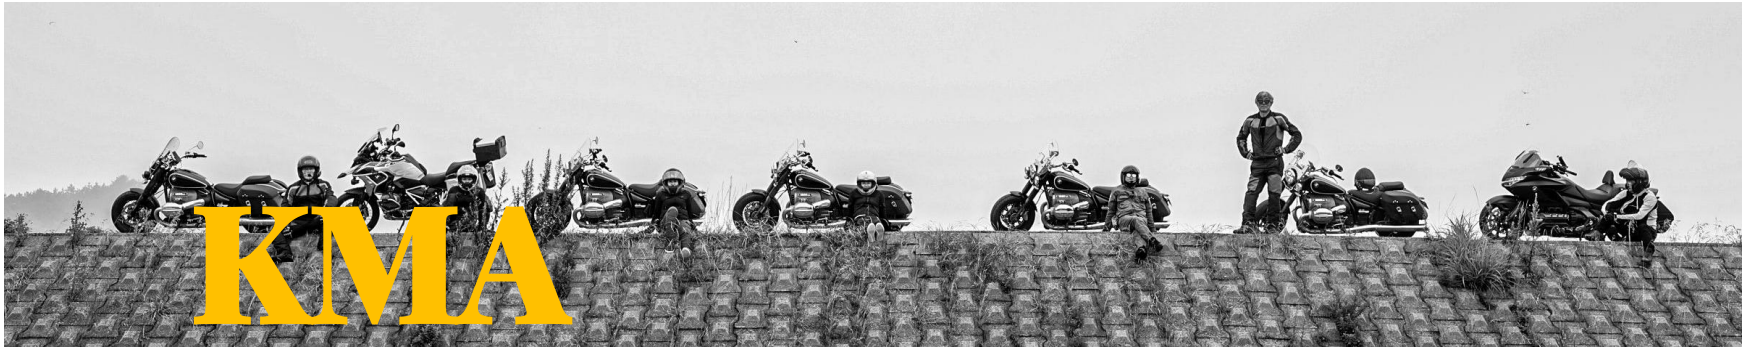

Accommodation

The moment you open the door after a long day of riding, your accommodation becomes more than just a place to sleep—it becomes a pause in your journey. From hotels overlooking city lights to accommodations with tranquil gardens, these are comfortable spaces that relieve fatigue on the road and recharge you to hit the road again the next day.

Cultural touchpoint

On the road running along the Pacific Ocean, the colors of the wind and sea change slightly. Even without a license, anyone can get on the island's roads with just a scooter.
